Top 10 Reasons Black Women Cannot Find a Good Man

This social epidemic did not begin in the last 10 years, when the United States government began imprisoning Black men or when the AIDs virus started spreading to the DL brothers, no. Nor did it begin in the nineties when welfare dispersed Black women and children and the child support system began targeting Black men for social and economical disempowerment, no. This problem began, believe it or not, in the late sixties, early seventies, when women tore the aprons from their waist and left the kitchen.

As of now, Black women have given up on their European-fabled storybook prince and have realized that Euro-fantasy is for Euros only. They now seek for their Black King, the one they hope somehow seeps through the Black man's American likeness and communicate their African royalty, even though in the long run, that idea will fade too. Finally, in a broad reach under the concept of faith, Black women fill the churches gleaning the isles for the first sign of their God-given husband, but will soon become conscious of the fact that the church does not provide men, only God does. So what now?

The Internet has become a breeding ground for dating and matchmaking and Black women seem to have finally found a place to distribute their solitary portfolios. Many have secretly tried the Internet at one time or another and some have been successful in finding a man, but many have not. In this new age trend of matchmaking, the ones that have not found a man or the right man should not blame men but seriously consider the 10 sociological variables below.

1. Love is not an ingredient - sometime during the early 70s, love in marriage was replaced with convenience. More people married for financial security than for true love so true love lost its meaning two generations ago. Fifty-year anniversaries are now a thing of the past being replaced with titles of second and third marriages. Instead of love and commitment, finding a successful man became the top selling point because women needed to shake their traditional roles as wives and mothers so to camouflage their person in independence instead, which takes us to number 2.
2. The women's movement demands independence - more women have become independent and not in need of a man as provider. They have started providing for themselves and their children thus the role of husbands and fathers have become obsolete. Because of this change in the female attitude, men have had to accept this diminished social role in need of an alternative place in society. The modern-day paradox in the demand of women is how they proclaim they want a man who will allow them their independence.
3. Divorce courts have control of the family - with the courts siding overwhelmingly with women in divorce, more men are finding it economically unfeasible and more risky to become married or committed for too long. The rise of prenuptial agreements brought pre-marriage suspicion to both men and women causing both to choose carefully their next spouse. Tug-o-war over children and the psychological damage divorce have on children gave even more reason for couples to forego marriage and simply live together. Furthermore, child support and alimony laws placed a strain on already strained relationships which sent the abortion rate ever higher.
4. Higher rates of sexual promiscuity and disease - marital affairs increased during the seventies and more marriages broke up giving way to freelance dating, the singles scene and nightclub hopping.

As a result, new sexual diseases entered the social scene and protected sex became mandatory from bars to jobs to schools, thus reducing the nature of human intimacy. To this day, the capacity for couples to have unprotected sex - the way it was meant - has now become a health hazard.

5. Broken families bring drama - Black women have become very choosy when searching for a man and have placed "no drama" at the top of their prerequisites. This desire is becoming increasingly minimal because the more marriages and relationships breakup, the more chance there is in dealing with old feelings. But like the problems that come with a used car, one has to accept it "AS IS" or not at all. Most women choose not to accept it "AS IT" and reduce their chances on a grand scale because most men either have been married or had previous relationships gone bad. Finding a man without drama is like a man finding a virgin at 30, the chances are slim to none.
6. The definition of a man - because society has broken the family into pieces, a man can no longer be considered, realistically or legally, one that supports his family or families. A man today is one that is simply around when a woman needs him and for whatever reason she needs him. Like truth is in the eye of the beholder, so is what a man is to women today. One woman's man could simply be another woman's dog and vice versa. Nor can a man be considered someone who raises his children or has a good job because any role as a provider has been made null by the independence factor of the woman.
7. Importance of social circumstances, stigmas and status - superficiality play a huge part in choosing a mate, friend, or associate. If material things, social status or job position is important to a woman, she will satisfy only that which is empty in her superficial world. But the needs that lie deep within her will be left void when the time comes leaving a door open to someone who she knows can fill that void. Shallow conversation and physical attraction will lead that woman around until she realizes what is really important and if it takes years for her to learn, it will be years she will go from man to man to man, searching. As a result, bad boys, thugs and conmen will always find a way into her shallow heart, home, and bank account.
8. Men raised by women - two generations of men from ages 18-35 today, were raised mainly by women. Generation X and the now gen Y are cohorts of men who had little to no contact with a father figure. The independent lifestyle and the "I do not need a man" mindset in women resisted the man as the father in more households during the seventies and eighties than anytime in history. As a result, the men that grew in those eras were not groomed as providers and fathers, but as mama's boys and spoiled pretty boys. Without the correct amount of discipline and family structure, they sought out organization in gang life, drugs, crime or as players or controllers of women. They were not taught to respect women and provide for them as women, but they instead learned to treat them as objects, releasing childhood frustrations of being controlled by a woman.
9. The feminization of America - in a span of 3 decades, men have become more feminine in behavior and lifestyle. The woman's movement have forced its way into society and reversed the roles of men and women to the blurred point of confusion. What women need naturally is not being fulfilled by the men of today because they have inordinate affections toward women and toward other men. Homosexuality is growing on both ends from a blatant level and spreading throughout society taking hold of unsuspecting minds and altering men into a softer form.

10. Lack of self-knowledge - too many women have no real clue as to what they truly need. They say they want a man who "this" or a man who "that," but the "this and that" changes as the times and social circumstances change. Because the family unit has broken down and there is no sharply defined roles for the man or the woman, women do not fully comprehend what it is they really want or need from a man let alone their own wants and needs. Ask a five-year old child if they would rather have a bag full of candy or a scholarship to college, and most will choose the bag of candy because it is a temporal satisfaction.

A conscious woman will view the social circumstances above and draw a clear conclusion in helping her find a good man. The problem is not necessarily that men are no good, all the good men are taken or that God does not want you to have a man; the problem is that changing times have weakened the true essence of the man and of marriage and replaced them both with a mirror image of a society gone astray.

Women must learn to discern between what is real and what is not in order to draw closer to the true characterization of a man. She must strip all the social negatives off the men she meets as well as herself and look deep into that man and into her self and find the true nature of a relationship and the real meaning of what a marriage should be.

How to Live the New American Dream

The American dream our parents and grandparents lived to achieve is no longer the same dream for families today. Times have changed and so have the living standards and strategies to survive. Do not continue to be deceived by the so-called American dream of owning a home with a white picket fence, two kids and a dog; forget it. Life must become more streamlined, simple, and practical. Here are some tips on living for the next century.

Job security is no more. Working 35 years for the same company and retiring with a gold watch is obsolete. Healthcare, education, and property have become harder to obtain in today's society or simply too expensive, which decreases a person's chances of purchasing all the luxuries of life at any one time without going into massive debt. The conveniences of technology are only afforded to those with a certain level of education, which consist of either a master's degree or PhD, or those who are fortunate enough to be wealthy.

The average working family must learn to live from the basics and work for the things they truly need. Some need healthcare for a loved one so they have to work toward minimizing other conveniences and put all they have into health coverage. Others have to work simply to have a place to live with heat, water, food and clothing, and still others can only afford to attend certain schools in an attempt to elevate their lives to a better income bracket.

The community and family support structures have been broken down by courts, social services, and government decrees and laws so people have to learn to choose their friends and associates carefully. Envy, jealousy and a sense of survival of the fittest have forced many to narrow their circle of friends and family and focus only on their own situations.

Crime has shifted and increased from neighborhood home burglaries and carjacking to identity theft, business fraud, and corporate scandal. People have to find ways to protect themselves from such crime in new ways. Many are opening and closing bank accounts twice sometimes three times a year to steer clear of identity theft and fraud. People have to narrow their choice of employers more because some are only taking those with good credit, government security clearances, or the best health and even non-smokers.

Marriage has dwindled, children are born one at a time and sometimes years apart. Zero tolerance for youth, abortion, and birth control have decided our fate for our families and no more can we choose to have the type of families we may want. Society discourages big families, are suspect of people living off the system, and frown on discipline as a means of raising children. More money goes into childcare than many families can handle but because of longer work days and the need for both parents in the workforce, not many people have a choice but to pay.

Cars have become more expensive and cheaper in quality, and so has houses. Medicine and drugs are more accessible to adults and children via doctors themselves as well as street dealers. More people are becoming criminalized by the many laws implemented on the books of Congress. Fines, penalties, restrictions, taxes, fees, and all other forms of withdrawing money from the average working person is growing with no end in sight, while the living wage does not grow.

To survive in this day and age, people must devise ways to make their own money instead of depending on employers as a means to an end. People must hold tight to their cash and save their money as opposed to buying into credit. We must learn to buy a car and pay on it to own it instead of trading it in for another car note. Downsizing to smaller families, houses, and cars will help us to survive.

Educating ourselves instead of buying into student loans is always helpful. Reading more can help in learning new skills and trades. Understanding business practices and laws also helps in ventures of entrepreneurship. Teaching our children how to become entrepreneurs prepares them for an unstable workforce and economy and teaching them respect for family and others helps establish character and discipline.

Learning to eat better foods and having healthier diets helps to reduce sickness so we do not have to depend too much on the healthcare system and its expenses. Simple preventative maintenance on the body and mind does a body more good than eating from fast food restaurants and junk food. Learning to cook good meats, fresh vegetables and homemade dinners reduces the chances of sickness. Abstinence from sex (all ages) and more education of sexual diseases also reduces health risk.

We must all learn to downsize our lives, live within our means, and be content with such things we have and not try to strive for riches and prestige and popularity because all those things tear away at reasonable plans for living and surviving. Arrogance, lust and envy of others will lead a person on a most destructive road while traveling through this life and we can no longer afford to live dangerously.

Recruiting Black Men to Fight White Boy Cops and Racist

It has become obvious that young to middle-age white men have problems at home and in their marriages because they have become increasingly aggressive on their jobs, particularly police officers who find an out by shooting elderly Black women sitting in their homes, punching and pepper-spraying little Black 11-year old girls in their faces as well as handcuffing little 6 year-old Black kids in addition to constantly beating the hell out of and killing - by unloading 9 millimeters on - young Black men. Well we at Aframerica have the perfect solution for these stressed out white boys.

We are currently recruiting fearless and fed-up Black men who will act as stress relievers for these over-worked out-of-control white boys. Meet the Aframerica team at your nearest gym or community center for try outs for the "Black man - white cop Beat-down Squad." We are looking for thug type, ready to fight brothers who would simply love to draw blood from a white boy's face for the abuse of helpless Black children and young men and women.

These brothers must be hard core, unafraid to hit a cop back, ready to get in the ring and go toe-to-toe with some of the most anger-unmanaged white boys on their local police force. In fact, we invite brothers who may not be able to fight but would at least try to beat the hell outta a white boy for the senseless use of a stun gun on a Black child or the over-obsessive physical force on one more Black person. We will take brothers who have not had a fight in twenty years but has animosity built up in them over the past years because of the abuse, and even brothers who are good at instigating a fight.

All white cops who have vendettas against young Black men can come and vent all their racial frustrations and anti-social idiocies on any Black men who steps into the ring, but the Black man has to be at least 5-feet tall and over 25 years old. They cannot be under 4 feet, wearing a skirt, or in possession of a crayon. The white boy does not necessarily have to be a police officer; he can be any white boy with an attitude against Blacks.

He can hate Black women, Black children, or aged Black people who seem to get on their nerves for no reason. The white boy can work as a news anchor for a television talk show, a radio talk show, or any type wimp hiding behind the security guard of whatever office building they work at. The white boy can be a racist, a skinhead, a KKK member, or gay, as long as he has deep animosity for Blacks for no apparent reason other than to take out his twisted frustrations on the first dark-skin person he sees, even though there is a war over seas that has his name on it fighting people who want him dead, yet he would rather take the cowards way out and pick on Black children and innocent young men who have done nothing to him.

So come on down to the "Black man - white cop Beat Down Amphitheater" and get into the ring with the men you so desire to hurt when there are 15 of your kind or when you have a 9 mil and the Black guy, girl or child has nothing. Rule 1 is you cannot bring a gun because this competition is for real men and not cowards that hide behind weaponry to justify their manhood. Rule two is you must come alone because there is a "manhood" cover charge where you have to be man enough to enter, and rule 3 is you cannot radio for backup or snitch to your superiors or you must walk out the theater wearing the bitch shirt.

Starting this day, all Black men who would like to join, go to your local community center this weekend after 6pm to meet and train for this new sport. There will be a representative there to get you started. The first competition will be at the nearest park this summer (to be announced) dependent on how many white boys actually show up. But we can safely and honestly assume that we have already won because no white boy in his right mind will ever go head-to-head with a ready-ass Black man in a fair fight.

In Defense of the Black Father

Here we go again; another Black man in the public spotlight falling in lock step with stereotypical criticism of Black men without acknowledging not one iota of the many contributing factors to the rise of single families in the Black community. With all due respect to Obama the brother, in his Cosby-style criticism of Black fathers on Father's day he obviously does not know what the hell he is talking about or simply have not given it much thought.

Let us discuss this on an honest level, considering the fact that it takes two to tangle. This has been said and suggested over and over and has been dismissed by Black men haters over and over, but Black women have to bare some - at least half - of this responsibility, dammit. Black men are sick and tired of taking it upside the head from bougee Black brothers out to echo the sentiment of white hate for Black men.

As Afromerica has written before Black women do not have to open their legs in the first place. If they do not, there would be no Black man to father their children, so go get a white man to do it. So let us understand this simple dilemma of which came first. Talk about taking responsibility? WTF! When did Black women become excused from this issue?

Well from this blind-sighted oppressive system of Black-men haters, have exploded a plan to punish Black fathers - all fathers - giving complete sanctuary to women, especially Black women. The child support system is the most destructive system in the country and no one, no Black politician, so-called leader, or cultural leader have stood up against the injustices done by this system against innocent men, all for the sake of feminist domination and aggression.

So until someone actually addresses the real issue of the system and women themselves, they need to shut the hell up or at least debate with someone who knows and sees the truth about the malice and discrimination this country has against Black men where it pertains to their families.

There is simply no factual data showing that Black men just up and walk away from their children, this is all complete speculation and stereotyping of the worst kind. What about the Black women who have taken advantage of the politics of liberal "Choice" theory and simply choose to have children without fathers.

And what about white men and single white women, and the fact that the Black fathers of today are those raised by single women of the eighties who were fed crack cocaine pumped in by Mexican drug gangs supposedly controlled by United States DEA. Crack babies, crack heads, prison confinement, crack sentencing, and the other factors that contributed to the fall of the Black family. Remember The Moynihan Report?

Fathers usually teach their children to think before they speak. However, it is obvious that some so-called Black leaders and gatekeepers lack fatherly direction and are hurting so they generalize the problem from the view of hate.

For the record, there are Black men who are being fathers to the children of other Black men. There are Black men who are raising their children, and there are Black women who make it hard for Black men to be fathers. Will any one address these issues? Hell no, because they are either completely ignorant to the above issues or simple do not give a damn, and would just as well see Black men not succeed or their families healed.

How the Black Media is Tearing down Black Intellect

We often discuss the white media and how it has set a course to undermine Black life in America, but we have not discussed how the Black media has helped to destroy what brain cells, pride, and dignity Black America has left. Via the endorsement of star struck vanity, gossip, and a barrage of superficiality, the Black media has managed to deepen the wounds of Black dignity inflicted by white America. How is this so?

The main problem is that the Black media lack originality and draw off the lead of the white mainstream. Fear of what whites will say about them and threats to withdraw support from them, restrain the Black media from being creative and fighting back against the attacks on Blacks from the white mainstream. So instead of being innovative and designing a media agenda to drive progress in the Black community, they feed off the negative of the white media about Blacks and design programs and promotions that address the wrongs that whites tell us we have.

In addition, the Black media copy the white in areas of television shows, radio programming and host, the format, topics, and messages they send. Instead of pulling away from the typical programming format of celebrity this, soap drama that, comic radio DJ this, attitude having stereotypical Black woman that, the Black media pushes this drug on Black America from morning to midnight and wonder why we have not "reached the promise land."

They wonder why Black men lag in employment and fill the prisons, why Black women have no husbands, Black children cannot learn, and why we seem to look so bad in every area of American life as compared to whites. Even though the answer is obvious, they cannot see it and instead react to what they are told by whites and call themselves addressing it through educational media programming.

Though there are Black college graduates in many areas of the country in the field of communications, leading to jobs in television and radio, however, not one has come out of their university with an original idea. But they have all been brainwashed to follow the same sambo script. Even despite the fact that there are "Black Networks," those Black networks have not helped reduce negative Black images or perfect a positive state of Black America not one bit, but have in fact, help destroy it further. Should the people begin to question their motives?

The major Black media outlets such as BET and TV-One, followed by major magazines like Ebony, Vibe, and Essence, are suppose to be alternative to white media and are to represent the Black voice and life, at least that was the mission in the beginning. But today they are nothing more than extensions of white media acting more as henchmen for them.

They all feed the Black community trash. Soap opera-type drama, fashion, glamour, celebrity vanity that has done more damage to the America way of life in white America and double that in Black America. The difference is that whites have a financial base to sustain themselves against the trauma sent by the evils of vanity, sexual seduction and immorality while Black America does not. We cannot protect ourselves against the consequences of the immorality that the glamour lifestyle and sexual innuendos send against our communities. And when we seek help from white America, we are second to all, underfunded and neglected in areas of health, justice, education and other.

The Black media neglects its homework and psychoanalyzes of what the Black community can handle in terms of subliminal ethical message through media, television and radio. They believe they can do what whites can do and the Black community can absorb the effects without becoming infected. For instance, low and middle income people cannot afford to pattern their lives after Black celebrities who showcase their homes and lifestyles on BET, or who showcase their cars, designer fashion and bling as if it is everyday affordable to the average working single Black women or child.

Hard working Black people who ride to work in the morning listening to urban morning radio have to suck down the gossip of Black entertainers and their lifestyles, absorb the lyrics of angry Black women and disrespectful Black men, which in turn cause them to emulate a certain celeb or rapper or singer when relating to others around them everyday. It has become so entrenched in the minds of Blacks that they cannot relate to one another without speaking childish street terms, having certain attitudes that they really cannot afford to have, and disrespecting people who have actually done nothing to them except pass them by.

The Black elite and educated cannot see this effect or simply do not care about it and what it does to Black adults and children. They again follow the lead of white America and live by ratings, money, and prestige without care of the actual people who support them from the grassroots with their hard earned money. They suppose that this is what the people want but have not done one ounce of research to actually find out if it is the truth or not, and again, following the lead of whites based on marketing data, what they learned in white institutions.

Superficiality in the Black community does not come from the Black community; from the womb or from the minds of unborn children, it comes from televisions and what Black people see and hear each day as to what their lives are about. They get this information from either reading magazines or watching television. Blacks who have limited access to various resources can only reach as far as their television set or certain magazines they pick up at supermarkets in the tabloid section.

Here is where Ebony, Vibe, Essence, and other Black Hip Hop and celebrity magazines are found and idolized, and it is here young Blacks learn the lingo, fashions, and lifestyle of superficial Blacks made by Hollywood or by the Black mainstream media themselves. Adding to the BET videos and the TV-one sitcoms and soaps, the Black community is saturated with trash and have little means or access to educational material, material that encourage business entrepreneurship, strong families, relationships, or community. Instead they are fed crap like drama; P. Diddy married who, Lil J shot who, Big T went to jail, Basketball great got babies and negative gossip that Black media believes, by marketing data, is what the Black community is asking for.

There are no Black intellectual magazines featuring people like Cornell West essays, Professors of Black universities or Black doctors, or major achievers in the field of math or science, no, there are not even strong Black poets of today published for Black youth; instead there are only vanity star struck Black magazines filled with crap. There are no real intellectual radio talk shows that feature people who discuss why Blacks are in the state they are in and how to get out of it, but radio filled with seductive lyrics, ignorant jokes and parodies, political feed back from white news, and talk of again, the lifestyles of Black celebs.

Black leaders must wean the Black community off ignorance and onto the real meat of intellect. They must become innovative and create radio and televisions shows that address the real issues instead of the stereotypes. They must pull back the gossip and push in the intellect. They must encourage Black minds instead of poison them to the same ills that are killing white America and America itself. If we do not do it soon, the only foundation on which Blacks will have to stand will be their own front porch, because that is as far as the Black media have taken them.

National Attack on Blacks through your Local News Affiliate

Has anyone noticed that Blacks are particularly profiled when certain stories are covered? When your local news cover stories pertaining to crime, poverty, bad health or disease, fraud, crises in education, negative city rulings; even if the culprits in the story are rightly that of white persuasion, somehow Blacks always seem to make the camera shots. This tactic is designed to subliminally implant negative images of Blacks into the publics mindset.

In contrast, whites are portrayed as either heroes, doing a public service, cute, normal and average, and or doing the expected. The tactic has proven to be a nationwide one because it is reported as prevalent in almost all cities and towns. Even if there are only 2 Black people in a town, the faces seen by the viewers on a negative story will probably be Black ones. This may seem far-fetched to some, but take notice sometime.

Crime, especially, has a prime focus on Blacks. Even if the crime happened in a white neighborhood, workplace or school, for instance, the assailant is always assumed as Black, either indirectly or inadvertently. When showing descriptions, the suspect is covered by a hood, under dark light, or imaged to resemble a dark figure so the viewer can identify with a Black person. Likewise, when the discussion is about drugs, a shooting, burglary or anything the police (white ones) have to speak on, images or screen shots of Black people are shown.

When poverty is the topic, video tapings of the waiting area of the welfare or food stamp office, emergency rooms or homeless shelters, even if there are other races of people in the room, a Black person seems to make the backdrop. In rare cases of defrauding the government or innocent people, a Black person is shown as a witness, possible suspect or simply walking by in the background.

When the city has made an unpopular decision where it affects the lives of the city's residents, a Black city official is interviewed and questioned, made to explain the decision, or shown in the background at a city council meeting. And when public education comes into question and the topic has anything to do with discipline, special education, or a disturbance at a school campus, Black children make the scene.

Simply take notice at these observations the next time you watch your local television news. You will see the subtle distinguishes among stories where Blacks are somehow portrayed in the most negative light. This is not in just one city or your city, this happens all over the nation, which raises the question of conspiracy against Black image.

Diversity Candidate Identification: Check Black and you stay unemployed

Technology has pushed the search for employment to the Internet, on sites such as Monster.com and CareerBuilder along with many other job search engines. This trend has brought about a new and most clever form of racial identification and job discrimination. Instead of looking you in the face and secretly denying you the job while filling out an application, now they simply ask you to check the box that says you are Black.

Has any Civil Rights or Civil Liberties organization thought about the blatant form of potential race discrimination this possesses? The relevance of why any employer would ask this question at all should cross the mind of someone, seeing we live in a culturally diverse nation that claims no race discrimination exists.

One would think that this type of race screening would be illegal in today's society, but obviously, America has not moved beyond who is what color. Who knows what goes on behind the webpage after the applicant submits the form and it reads, "I am a Diversity Candidate and I am a Black woman or man." Who knows if the employer is not saying to himself, "trash that one and this one," simply because they identified themselves as Black or African American?

Are we on the honor system and are suppose to believe that no one would do such a thing and that those type thoughts do not cross their minds because we live in a race free, non-discriminatory America? Well, America's honor system is definitely not trustworthy seeing Black unemployment is up and whites have 76% of the corporate jobs making six figures and Blacks are living just above or below the median average income levels.

Who is monitoring whether this is a problem or not? No one, that's who, they DO care about what color you are because this is a racist country that wants to know that the candidate they are going to give an interview to is one of their own before a Black person.

Has anyone wondered why there is no check box for Islamic people? Because Islamic people are considered white in America. Why? Because they are not subject to America's racial screening process as long as they give us oil.

So how can Black job seekers get around this new age Jim Crowism? We cannot because if you do not check the box that tells what color you are, the form will not complete. So that leaves the only alternative, check the box of another color. However, once you do that, you have denied your race and have been taught to subliminally hate yourself. But at least now you know how whites feel about you and that racism remains strong. That is an Internet fact.

Blacks Genetically Prone to AIDs is a Damn Lie

The lies of the media and American science have gotten completely ludicrous. The so-called study that is being publicly declared by American research scientist and scholars is obviously a lead off the CNN "Black in America" crap story that is nothing more than an easy out to create more lies about Black people.

It should be crime what these spoiled rotten white children of racist are allowed to do with the American media and academic institutions. In fact, it is a crime. They have taken it and used it as their own tool for propaganda and lies about Blacks and the destruction of Black life. They have taken it and smeared the image of Blacks and to use it to undermine Black intelligence and common sense and to exploit the fears of Blacks, for the sake of whites.

If the American media continue to use this as a means to humiliate Blacks, someone - like one of the so-called Black leaders - MUST crawl from under their coward's rock and stand up and say something, any damn thing. But it seems these Black leaders cannot get their lips off their white asses long enough to say something to whitey's face about the lies they tell.

Claiming that Blacks have a gene that will most likely bring them AIDs is like saying Blacks are more likely to catch a cold because of their genetic make-up. It is a stupid assumption, asinine and a completely false theory. Any Black person who believes this is an idiot and should be stricken from human existence and any white person who believes this and uses it as a measurement against Blacks should be hanged.

The American media, again, are the most racist, hypocritical, liars in the world.

The Darkside of Capitalism

Many people may think capitalism has no real effect on them and their lives because it is a big boy's game of Wall Street traders, corporate raiders and wealthy foreigners, however, capitalism's dirty game is played down at your local shopping plaza, and with a most hypocritical exchange of morality. This story of a father and his son can expose what is hidden deep within the shadows of capitalism.

As they passed a martial arts studio in the neighborhood plaza, his son curiously asked was Tae Kwon Do hard to learn. The father, of course, told his son nothing is too hard to learn if you put your mind and heart into it. This obviously burned into the mind of the eight year-old because a week later, he asked the mother if they could afford Tae Kwon Do school.

The mother and father collaborated on enrolling their son because they wanted him to spend more of his high energy on something worthy instead of the living room furniture, and two weeks later, he started his first class. Six months later, he advanced through the belts well into his purple belt, which is 5 belts below the black belt. Once students advance to purple, they are ready to enter the higher, more intense training.

Well, the instructor and the head regional Master of Arts instructor complimented the young man on his skills and encouraged the parents to prepare him for the higher ranking club. They set a private appointment to watch the child's skills and decided he was ready. The father was proud and his son thrilled. Now comes the darkside of capitalism.

After the private session, the instructor set the father down in the office and slid him a payment chart that prices the advanced club at twice the rate they were paying now. The father was taken aback because he thought his son was moving up to the higher ranking because of his skill, personal merit, and individual ability, but that was not the case, it was about the money.

The father rejected the offer and removed his son from the school. Yes, the son was disappointed and so was the father but after months went by, they got over it. The son hinted a few times about returning but the father explained to him that he was sort of upset with the school because of the money factor. He figured, if advancement was about hard work, perseverance, and personal merit, why was there a price attached? He explained this to the son and the son understood, and had his first lesson on capitalism and he vowed one day to continue his Tae Kwon Do training somewhere where they valued skill over money.

This same scenario is played out in many areas of life in capitalist America. The mainstream belief is if you work hard and persevere, you can have anything you want, however, if you want to reach the top, money plays a large part. In education and the Ivy League, it is about money. In business it is not how hard you work, it is how much money you have and who you know. In healthcare, it is not whether you have health insurance; it is how much you are willing to pay to get better.

Many areas of capitalist America set standards based on money as opposed to personal effort, merit, or even human need. The hypocrisy in the mainstream says that if you work hard and pay your bills, you can earn a perfect credit score and get more of what you want. It does not base your worthiness on how honest a person is or how hard they work, but whether they are disciplined enough with money to handle more money. The sad part is; people have fallen to believe this is true or simply the way it is. If that is so, then there is no wonder the economic situation of this country have fallen so hard, because the economy was based on what people owe or can pay.

We have been told to work hard for what we want for so long we cannot see that regardless of how hard we work, there is a stopping block or another advanced club that takes twice as much as you have worked for in order to advance any further. We must all realize that capitalist America is for the rich, not the hard working. The hard working must learn to be content with what things they have earned. So the father told his son.

How America Can Redeem Itself

Because there is obviously no one contemporary brilliant mind drawn from any of America's prestigious Ivy League Universities (or at least one the news media wants the people to hear) who understands all things greater than money or who can offer a commonsensical solution to the crises America is facing foreign or domestic, America will lay out an exit strategy that would redeem this country in both areas.

Historical philosophers and scholars of European descent (America's own heroic philosophers) have foretold of this type of crises descending on any country that combines the power of money and greed and manipulates the masses reducing them to servants in the game of capital ventures, using theories; mathematical, scientific, and political/social. One such theory is "Guns and Butter," the brainchild of William Jennings Bryan - who "opposed granting suffrage to freed slaves and generally opposed all progressive reforms aimed at alleviating the oppression of blacks and poor whites."

Macroeconomics describes the "Guns and Butter" theory as a decision a nation makes in determining what to spend money on, whether foreign or domestically. Do we sacrifice our "butter" in terms of investing in the future of America's economy by supporting the increase spending on "guns" in terms of military firepower and intelligence? The United States chose to spend on both under Bush and is now beginning to reap the plunder. Aframerica wrote on this same theory in 2003.

In "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers," the Yale historian Paul M. Kennedy developed this zero-sum model into a sophisticated theory of how empires work. In essence, you need wealth to be able to fight your rivals, but if you devote too much money to war, your wealth tends to stagnate. That's because (according to the theory) investment in the arms industry is less conducive to long-term economic growth than investment in sectors that ultimately satisfy some kind of consumer demand.

A simpler version of this idea suggests a trade-off between military spending and personal consumption. "Guns" are paid for by raising taxes, and this leaves people with less money to spend on "butter."

The Bush administration is currently engaged in an audacious -- some would say reckless -- experiment to disprove this theory.

The massive amounts of money the US spends on the war in Iraq have eventually brought the country to its financial knees. The sad thing is media experts and pundits blame everything and everyone except the obvious. Many blame the banks and lending institutions, while some blame Wall Street, some blame the rich and some even have the shameful audacity to blame the poor.

Now if the people had control over how the nation's money is spent, then the people would be responsible for the economy and its rise or fall, but the people have only their designated wages to account for in the economy so any massive financial shift either up or down is not the fault of the people, but those who make the financial decisions. Anyone with any sense at all should see and know that. People have to trust the banks with their money so what are the banks doing with the money?

The stupidity on display from some of America's supposed economic experts are amazing. How anyone in their right mind can lay any blame on the people, especially the poor, for the collapse of an age-old economic institution such as capitalism. Furthermore, the banks cannot accept any blame either seeing they are strictly regulated by the Federal Government. And if the Federal Government control the banks and the banks control the people's money, what does common sense say to the thinking mind? The Federal Government is at fault.

Do not be fooled, Government and capitalism are not completely separate entities, they co-exist together as one. A free-market economy cannot operate without government like a landlord cannot operate without a tenant. Though the tenant pays the cost to live, the landlord owns the property. Neither can exist without the other.

The problem in America between the free market and the government is who has the most power to control the resources and inevitably, which one is more dedicated to the country. In the case of the tenant and landlord, if neither takes care of the maintenance needs of the property, the property will eventually collapse, and that is what has happened to America.

Why was Bush re-elected in 2004?

This question is at the base of everyone's mind, including those who voted for Bush in 2004. What the hell possessed people to vote for the economic destruction of their own future? Well, at the time, the full residual effect of "Guns and Butter" had yet to kick in. The country was spending on War and at home, and it began to strain the economy; global business, imports, exports, and the dollar value, which in turn caused investments to slow on Wall Street.

With way too much false confidence, real money, and economic promise floating around the nation, from banks to households, the bottom fell out because there was no money to hold up the promises and the prosperity made by ideas of false security. The nation was not under attack from terrorist, not by far, we were quietly and silently under attack from within by an army of greedy, capitalist-based terrorist cells operating right in our own backyard.

While the media encouraged us to spend, spend, spend and not worry about the economy, we were spending money that was not there but going overseas all the time. While we were getting ourselves deeper into debt every day, the country was too. How stupid the nations' economic, Ivy League graduates must feel right now.

America's leaders are not the brightest minds in the world, in fact, they are considered downright reckless. The country is in financial turmoil not only here, but abroad also. The war cast a completely negative shadow over America's ability to think and reason with other countries and questioned their moral motives toward the world itself.

In a blind and greedy attempt to imperialize the world, we dug ourselves into a hole that no one in the media, Whitehouse, or on the nation's board of brilliance wants to admit.

While the tenant believed the landlord was taking care of business, complying with local and state licensing and health regulations and telling them not to worry about it and to go ahead and refinance to remodel and add-on, the landlord was all the time spending the profits on repaying a debt he owed in a law suit. And finally, the bills came due and the tenant got stuck with the cost being passed on to him.

On top of all the economic tragedy, racism has loomed as a potential evil and fueled America's spiral on a downward road of self-destruction. Ironically, capitalist greed and good ole' boy racism have finally caught up to the developers of the New World Order and brought about a curse from a power the United States have long attempted to destroy. Without reliable spiritual advice like many other countries, America is lapse in judgment in every area of social operation and continues to reach back to the old comfort zone of group camaraderie.

A new generation is emerging and if it is squashed, silenced or oppressed by the continued voice of race superiority, the country will remain a greedy, racist, curse to the world. Either the old network is overturned now, or America will continue to face themselves in the mirrors of historical humiliation.

Which, quite frankly, seems to be inevitable because race matters are so deeply ingrained in the psyche of America's children?

What happen to the people's power?

Americans are stressed out. High gas prices, high health cost, high food cost, high cost of college, loss of jobs, loss of homes, shrinking dollar value, bad credit crises, unsurity of the future and multiplied job stress have forced the average American into desperate situations. The more people get desperate, the more they think outside the box, even if it is unethical, and the more institutions feel forced to tighten and crack down.

Added fees, higher cost passed on to consumers and laws passed that punish people for their inability to meet the extreme demands of an economy gone wrong have placed America in a very precarious situation. We are overwhelmed with confusion. The minds of the Ivy League scholars have failed us because they themselves have not the ability to understand that too much stress on the average family will cause a fall in the nation overall. In other words, when you treat your help like dirt, expect the help to eventually tell you to "kiss their ass."

The War has caused America to compromise the economy. This is the problem. There is no victory in this war; there is only defeat, especially of the American economy and family. The nation and world await new leadership that will see and put things in its proper perspective, i.e., stop the war and focus on the homeland. Deal justly and rightfully with the people in the land and the people will support their country outward to the world.

Like a battered housewife of a drunken madman, the American people have grown tired and suspect of its leadership, the country's practice of racism, greed, and advantageous attitude toward people with money. A lesson not learned by America's brilliant minds will further drive the country into the ground. A country with leaders that believe race superiority, money, and military power earns them respect and make a better world, will no doubt collapse in the end.

Seeking peace and care for the poor will make America a better place.

The answer is as simple as caring for the populous. Hopefully, there are people in leadership in this country that can push this agenda because if they do not and continue to allow greed and arrogance to rule, believing that colonizing the world using a form of Democracy that has failed in its own land, and pulling the trigger on and incarcerating people apparently weaker than they, this country will fulfill the prophesy foretold by prophets of old and will fall to a state of One World Government lead by a very unforgiving beast.

No time for Illuminati thinking or secret society rules, the world is at the point of an explosion and if America wants to be spared the coming destruction, it has to withdraw from the axis of evil and become a true advocate of the people. The spiritual leaders of this country are asleep and blinded by the promise of freedom and Democracy when in fact, freedom and Democracy comes in only one form, and that is without oppression of the people.

Damn the old rule and prepare for the end.

A Deeper State of Illusion: Immorality on the Rise in America

As technology advances into easier and more rapid forms of mobile communications, television being accessible not only from your living room but from your computer screen or iPod, and a touch screen generation emerging, it all seems pretty sleek and ultramodern, but deep within this chasm of technical euphoria, morality, decency, and old fashion honesty is plunging to a new Greco-Roman low.

Think Gladiators. When people (for pleasure) watched brute men kill each other in cold blood then afterward turn and applaud like at a football game. Think Salem witch burning, think gas chamber, Frankenstein, torture chambers, slave-burning and all other such gruesome forms of human annihilation performed for the simple pleasures of those who sought to fulfill secret, psycho-pathetic lust. What state of mind do you believe the perpetrators were in to commit such crimes against humanity. Well, that state of mind has resurfaced in America.

Simply Google these words or phrases and you can see for yourself that this mindset is not hidden in the back hills of Kentucky or West Virginia, but in places like the United States Congress, Wall Street, Ivy League institutions, even down to the suburban family unit. Masochism in its raw and demented form is spreading throughout America untamed and this self-inflicted gratification gained from pain, deprivation, and degradation is being inflicted upon the American people by the diabolical minds of America's rich and famous.

You may ask who is purposefully deprived. Who is publicly humiliated for the simple pleasures of others, or who gets satisfaction from seeing others in pain and suffering? Well, turn your television channels to cable news and other programs that profile America's prisons, street-gang life, cat (prostitution) houses, War coverage, serial killer documentaries, marrying for money, corporate espionage, even the many unregulated television commercials and infomercials that are allowed by the FCC to sell the public useless gadgets, unproven remedies, and how-to, get-rich scams.

These are all forms of gratification gained from the pain of others; a sick, sorted game of self-inflicted masochism pushed on the American public in a cruel plan to disfigure their minds with a new-age form of Greco-Roman immorality. From the rural towns of America's fruited plains to the shores of Australia, Europe and anywhere feminism, homosexuality, and racism takes hold of the culture, there is a curriculum to replace all that is indigenous and humane with this New World Order psychology.

The pleasures of the rich and wealthy are fulfilled in fixated fantasies of lewd and unbridled power and control of defenseless souls. A sort of here-and-now Hell created as a precursor to the misery of the world to come. Think death toll, civilians, bombings, disease, pandemics, war, terrorism, military, recessions, depressions, and the many other popular words published by mainstream media and then consider who is involved in all the above. Think chat rooms, pedophile, priest, sodomy, murder, sex, TiVo, camcorders, pornography, disease, condoms, birth control, homosexuality, pregnancy rate, drugs, and then consider who is behind the cameras.

These are not practices of a civilized or advanced society, but appeals of the maniacal. How many times have we heard that those who seek control over others, more precisely the weaker, are psychologically challenged with deep-seated and unresolved childhood issues. Who parents' these third and fourth generation lunatics? Who cloak these images of satanic rituals in forms of DVD entertainment and inflict them upon a society ill-equipped to discern between good and evil when good is waning and being dissolved by the lessons of American masochism.

Who can stand on the foundation of honesty and integrity when all such belief systems are regarded as weak, old fashion, or behind the times? What generation will stand and challenge a society that embraces selfishness and individuality over unity, peace, and brotherhood. Who can lead a nation through the current epidemic of immorality and corruption to a compromised state of reality, justice, or true human equality? For what reason do we awake each day to thrive and soak in revelry, sink or swim in the workday and live or die in negotiations with an ever strengthening totalitarian government.

The future of America is gloomy; marred and uncertain. Without morality as a foundation, as it collapses each day under the weight of a deeper state of illusion, the concept and practice of love will become lost and only those who have a clue or remember what real love is, will survive the coming days of darkness and social control by the state.

The White Media's Profound Infatuation with Blacks

A new phase of racial adoration has begun in the US toward Black Americans by the mainstream media and university scholars of the passion-starved white elite. And once again in error, reactionary Black organizations and activists are taking to the blog sphere and web-columns in a desperate attempt to save Black America from itself. One question though: Why is the study of Blacks such an embraced theme among the white media?

They have a never ending fascination with the habits and lifestyles of Blacks - especially Black males - as if they were a pride of African lions. Afterward they report to American society their findings in a very sophisticated stream of propaganda to incite the wanting minds of those awaiting the defeat of Blacks and Black males. This fascination in itself should be studied and psychoanalyzed by someone seeking to unravel the manic minds of the white media who find the existence of Blacks psychologically seductive.

One hypothesis is that white women - who generally lead these studies - and their puppy-dog counterparts of white men, are extremely captivated by the behavior of Blacks - especially Black males. By camouflaging their findings in depressing statistics of failure, death and self-destruction, there is reason to believe there is a secret society of masturbative groups that for some reason cannot achieve a sort of sensual satisfaction in their own circle of pale, white mechanics.

These heretics of graduate schools can find no significant reason to study anyone other culture or subculture of people, such as white males, women, Asian, Islamic men, women or children, or any sect of semi-hetero/homosexual people of color in the United States except for Blacks and Black men.

They search deep within their academic minds and pull out of their tight academic asses a report they proclaim to society all the negative activity about being a Black person, attributing any and all social/immoral lifestyles to Blacks without ever looking into the mirror of their melted pot. So in an ailing attempt to demonize Blacks, they reveal the evils within themselves and the only people unintelligent enough to believe their reports are those who share their barbaric insights and their deep-seated hatred for Blacks.

We never hear or read in the New York Times or on Fox News or CNN or NPR about white teen pregnancy rates, white male suicide/homosexual behavioral rates, drug use or animal cruelty statistics. We never hear or read the stories of Asian violence among themselves, Irish DUI rates, Jewish start-up business rates, Italian hit/homicide rates, white female bisexual rates, or the white populations' lack of compassion toward humanity rates, but we constantly hear about all negatives in the lives of Blacks.

Studies are done by the hundreds on Blacks; Black men, Black women, Black children, in areas of health, sickness, education, economic status, mortality and literacy rates, but never any specific studies on any other culture or subculture in America. This leads us to believe that the white media find the attention of Black people irresistible.

For some reason they are seeking approval, whether good or bad, from Blacks in any area of life. They are in constant awe of our lifestyles, i.e., where we shop, what we eat, how much money we have, what we wear, how we wear it, how our health fairs, how many families there are among us, even whether or not our children are developing and learning in the neglected environments they have "allowed" us to have amidst this great society of self-actualization.

Their fascination with Blacks - especially young Black men - reveals the deep-seated and hidden desires of white women and the extremely low-level of self-esteem of white men in a society that emphasizes massive amounts of sexual nuances on their television screens for their children to learn from. This, in itself is fascinating: the white populations' need for exotic Black awareness. Their love for brown skin, round lips, curved and cut bodies has become an obsession in the emotionless world of white media personalities, university scholars and corporate presidents.

Psychologically, their humiliation of Black men, women, and children testifies to their own self-hatred, animalistic behavior, and inhumanity. It reveals a perverted and abnormal likeness of a fifteenth century uncivilized hunter starved for acceptance into the civilized world. Theory has shown that people of such determination to humiliate a particular population of people are considered first of all jealous, next insecure with themselves, and finally, terroristic to such a degree that they eventually devour themselves in a state of mental cannibalism.

Katrina Reinforced Slave Cruelty

Out of the clear blue sky comes this slave database from Emory University in Atlanta this...this, half hearted compilation of Slave voyages, incomplete with slave names, departing destination and port arrival information. Along the same lines as the "apology for slavery" is this pathetic attempt to sooth the savage Black and ease the pain of white guilt. But Katrina makes null and void all past, present and future attempts to make things right.

With almost parallel cruelty, the treatment of Blacks during Katrina unveiled not only the depths of white apathy, but unleashed three generations of hidden coldness toward the value of Black life. If there was the slightest chance that some of the last standing bricks of Black Americans had begun to pardon whites for slavery, Katrina brought hardness once again to many hearts. And the moment in time white guilt had finally seemed to be waning to the point of relief, the levees broke and hate drowned Blacks once again.

In no way could five days of public neglect and humiliation equate to over 400 years of animal brutality on African souls and bodies, but the mentality behind the slave trade was revealed during Katrina. Black life meant nothing. The public sentiment was as if we deserved it, we had it coming, or we brought it on ourselves. Not only did apathy rate extremely high on the scale, but punishment, blame, and white revelry was inflicted on Blacks in New Orleans.

Blacks were left to die, publicly and internationally humiliated, falsely accused, tried and convicted, chased, turned away, mocked, shot at and even murdered with no investigations during the days of Katrina. Afterward, we were broken from our families, shipped (bussed) away, scattered like cattle, neglected, again accused of thievery, again tried and convicted, blamed for this and blamed for that, and not once did white America see a damn thing wrong with anything they were doing.

To this day Blacks from New Orleans are destitute, forgotten, and when they are discussed, they are bewailed by mainstream media, still blamed for what happen, and remain accused of many crimes regardless of how many crimes were committed by whites, how many murders, thefts, robberies, or injustices whites playfully enjoyed, Blacks are still catching the hell. And they awake the next day with business as usual.

The indifference and cruelty of white America is unprecedented, phenomenal, and probably scientifically unexplainable. Their level of care for their own is even a mystery. The apologies, the promises, the attempts at honorable dedications, appointments to office, and even Obama as president will never drown out the cries of slavery and will be doubly hard to silence the voices during and after Katrina. Not for the many millions of Blacks in America.

Oh sure, they will profile Blacks on mainstream television that will swear to God slavery and Katrina did not affect them and that its over, long gone and forgotten, but white America feels better about the small percentage of Blacks who feel that way instead of confronting the sentiments of the other millions of Blacks who do not. They would rather believe a lie than face the truth. That deceptive psychological variable in itself have obviously confounded Western scientist for centuries because they have no explanation as to how to make it all better.

This...this damn database is like salt to the wound. It is like saying, sorry about stripping you of your family heritage and culture, but here are some old records you can mull through even though there are no real answers. This database was hidden by whites for centuries and just now made public to Blacks for the viewing. Quite possibly, the election of Obama have given whites the assumption this will make things right. They feel it is the right time to give Blacks that moment of pride by which they can gather snap shots of their long lost family album kept locked away by our overseers until the right time.

Like an adopted child; like charity throw to an orphan; like we need this. In addition to this sad attempt at mending a damned relationship, the statistics are fudged, numbers are twisted, facts are distorted, and in favor of America, placing all the major blame on Brazil and the Caribbean. As if the number of slaves sold to each country matters as opposed to the severity of the crime. Honestly, the insult is not that they have offered us this newly found information at this time, but that they seriously believe we are gullible or stupid enough to find it satisfactory.

Mayors Against Illegal Guns (MAIG)? How About Mayors Against Bigoted Judges

Prepare for a new wave of non-violent offender convictions and a rise in juvenile incarcerations in every major city in the country. While right-wing conspiracist are arming themselves for the "War on Blacks and minorities," big city mayors will be creating a whole new criminal class of what white society has told them are the society's criminals.

The meeting of the nation's Mayors is held annually for them to discuss gun violence in their cities: not how to raise revenue the old fashion American way or encouraging industry to building a larger, legitimate revenue base, but how to police the hell out of the average citizen and collect revenue through fines, fees, and building a stronger prison industrial complex.

Per their website's mission statement "We respect the rights of law abiding citizens to own guns, and we recognize that the vast majority of gun dealers carefully follow the law. Our only interest is in fighting crime -- and we are determined to win. The polarizing rhetoric of gun politics on all sides only obscures the tragic reality we see every day on our streets: violent criminals with easy access to firearms."

This statement reeks of threats toward the same people they have created as criminals. Youth and citizens who have been cut out of the mainstream loop through over-policing, under-employment, and victims of drug trafficking throughout the streets of the very same cities these Mayors represent. How about

"Mayors Against Government Drug Trafficking into Urban Areas?", "Mayors Against Police Brutality", Or, "Mayors Against Lying Politicians and Crooked Bankers?"

Instead of going after the little guy, how about Mayors and Governors standing up against bigger and more organized criminals that prey on the wages of families, single mothers and the under-educated such as predatory lenders, second rate financial and lending institutions, crooked cops, greedy and shady businesses, bigoted and racist judges that over-sentences youth for profit. How about checking the moral credibility of your own staff?

How do the guns reach the city limits in the first place? Is it not the job of the police to find out? How pathetic can any police unit be if they cannot catch the criminals at the source instead of after all the damage is done. So low-income people end up catching the hell after who knows how many criminal fingers the guns slipped through in the first place. Who knows if the Mayors themselves did not have something to do with gun trafficking? What a bunch of freaking hypocrites.

Expecting first and second generation university educated elitist to use their knowledge to legitimately run their cities under the principles of industry growth, these derelicts depend on old school buddies and acquaintance favors, kickbacks, and socialite gatherings to first fund their own pockets then line the city's account. They cannot run the risk of placing their judge, lawyer, police officer friends on the stand because they jeopardize friendships, bribes and dinner engagements, so they turn to the under-educated and under-employed and police and tax the hell out of them instead.

Using state troopers, the DMV, local police road blocks, insurance company kickbacks, the courts, and in order to meet state budgets, they increase city funds by suspending licenses through canceled insurance policies, traffic tickets for menial driving offenses, increasing city service fees from privatization, drive major businesses out of the city by high tax rates, who would otherwise provide employment to lower income families.

This "Mayors Against Illegal Guns" stinks to high hell because by pretending to be protecting the public through use of elegant mission statements and classic American literary jargon, they are actually increasing a police state right before our eyes. Instead of actually doing something for the good of humanity and society, they are the main ones contributing to the rise of criminals by limiting the average citizen's ability, opportunities and chances of a half way decent life in this so-called land of Democracy.

At some point, wisdom reveals that if the powers that be continue to punish too many people, they diminish their honest clientèle by half. Educating people and empowering them through entrepreneurship as an alternative to imprisonment would make a better society, but we now see that like a well organized criminal regime, the powerful are not powerful without someone to throw their fist at.

Mock These Words: "If Obama become President, this Country is going to Explode"

Like the revelation of Katrina, so will be the unveiling of racism in America if Obama becomes president. It is social suicide for the media to exert a show of power and push public support for Barack Obama and to implant a Black man into the Whitehouse ahead of a white woman. Though ideally and morally there is nothing wrong with a Black man being president, we live in a country that does not take that sort of thing lightly.

This election is nothing more than a national promotion and social measurement of whom the movements of the 60s benefited the most, white women from the women's movement or Blacks from the Civil Rights movement, and white America is going to show their true feelings and finally balance that beam if Obama becomes president.

Remember, when the Civil Rights movement came about, and Blacks poured into the streets to protest the treatment of the Black population around the country; that is when the women's movement began, to overshadow and extract attention from America's acts of racism toward Blacks so women could gain a foot in the social door.

The public sentiment was, if Blacks are going to get special treatment, now is the time for the white male power structure to give some attention to white women and to acknowledge a new role for women in American society. It was the perfect time for women to rebel against traditional values and lifestyles; so it was a brilliant scheme devised by the white population and the powers that be who usually regulate public opinion in America.

Black people are not supposed to get full attention of the government for social concerns because it would mean that something is seriously wrong in the treatment of Blacks in the country. However, if the fight can somehow be diluted by drawing attention elsewhere by showing a fight for the rights of others, the fight against racial inequality would not seem so bad and neither would the image of the white male.

Notice the public debate for gay rights. They have somehow equated the Gay rights movement with Civil Rights in relation to the oppression of Blacks, but too many people see there is no equating the two where it pertains to human rights.

However, women, on the other hand is the perfect balance for the mistreatment of Blacks because they too, consider themselves oppressed by white males. It was and currently is the perfect scheme to dilute and tarnish the advancement of Blacks, which is now being played low under the light of Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama: measuring the rights of Blacks against that of women, and just like it happened in the 60s, it will happen in our near future. There will be many who will feel resentful as if they are being put second to the issues of Blacks.

Affirmative Action resulted from the Civil Rights movement and is now being disannulled. Brown vs. Board of Education sprang from the Civil Rights movement and the schools are just as segregated now as they were in the 60s, and the Voting Rights acts was signed into law for the advancement of Blacks and today the Black vote is constantly being manipulated and political lines are drawn around Black concerns.

The truth of public sentiment for the Civil Rights movement has been slowly revealed over the years and is now being exploited to the public as a political model for the Democratic image of diversity. But it will backfire in the future because it is based on a lie. Truth being, the rights and treatment of Blacks far outweigh the needs and feelings of white women.

Mock these words: "If Barack Obama becomes president, this country is going to explode." And they know this. Black people; be ready to defend against some of the most vicious racial attacks ever before from not only hillbilly whites but from everyday whites that you see at work, next door, at the grocery store and elsewhere. Even from well known public figures and prominent white folk. Prepare to hear things you never thought you would hear in your lifetime because you were told these sentiments do not exist among whites and racial prejudice is no more.

Be prepared, Black people, to be undermined, mocked, humiliated and publicly hanged if this Black man is put before the concern of white women. You are going to see the Silent Racist" rise up from the dead and plead their cause.

These women are not what they appear to be, in fact, this stock of whites - the white racist woman - are some of the most vicious people on God's earth because they hide their bigotry and anger deep within their white breast but when unleashed, is like the venom of deception and hatred, the same kind that has destroyed the male culture in America. This is the same venom that has destroyed husbands and families with divorce, abortion, homosexuality, birth control and other life-altering changes that morally bankrupted this country.

Do not take this the wrong way, in a perfect world, there is nothing wrong with a Black man being president of the United States, but we do not live in a perfect world, we live in America, which is known for its deep-hidden racial hatred toward Blacks. It would be good for Barack to lead and attempt to heal the racial wounds of the country and it may work toward that goal, but with a blessing comes a serious challenge, and the challenge being, a racial explosion beyond what this country has ever seen.

Racism Will Intensify if Obama becomes President

Be prepared to experience a highly sophisticated level of racial humiliation of Black America if Barack Obama becomes president. Not only that, but white America will convince themselves that the racial playing field is now level and erases the crimes of the past and that they can never again be accused of being racist against Blacks. Not if a Black man is president.

They will use Obama's presidency to the uttermost as a way to acquit themselves from the crimes of their ancestors dating back to slavery and to reduce their guilt, easing their current pain. Though nothing can ever wash away the past, this will make them feel better about themselves while at the same time give them the opportunity to belittle and refute any further claims of racial injustices they will do in the future. But it will not work.

Apologies, a Black president, even reparations in the trillions will never wipe away 300-plus years of cruelty and destruction of a nation of people. There is no amount of retribution, any acceptable resolution, justifiable excuse, acceptable explanation or point of repentance that will compensate for what was done and is done to date to Africans and Black Americans. Blacks themselves cannot humanly possible measure what is acceptable justice for something of this magnitude. Only God himself can judge accordingly and give just reward.

Nevertheless, this will not stop white America from doing it themselves. They will presumptuously lay the bar for what is acceptable without, of course, a dignified acknowledgement from Blacks. They will arrogantly believe that a Black man in the Whitehouse would make everything alright, and they will bring token Black pundits to the television screen to accept their conceited attempt at reconciliation to Black America.

All the while, racism will continue and at deviously higher levels. For instance, this will give police officers a reason to shoot a young Black man without the accusation of racism. This will protect their discriminatory practices in employment, education, healthcare, judicial and other systemic areas of society without bringing the guilt of racism. And it will deceptively ease their warped consciousness.

In a serious state of disenchantment, white America will be given a mainstream pass to stereotype, mock, humiliate, and poke fun at Blacks without feeling the guilt of racism because they can easily and conveniently turn and say, "We're not being racist, there is a Black man in the Whitehouse."

They will write themselves a socially and politically-correct ticket to talk down to low-income Blacks and further label them with hideous terms of self-hatred and destruction because they can turn and say, "Obama made it, there is no reason you cannot either." There will be no more excuses for any Black person to not have success, ask for anything or complain about anything and if they do, even if they have a legal, logical, and justifiable reason to do so, they will be scorned, whipped and branded with the words, Obama, Obama, Obama.

They are going to shamelessly lie, distort, twist and spin all allegations of reported racism and any and all forms of actual racism will be considered null and void because they will have all but eliminated the word from the dictionary. The world from this point will be to them, an equal Black and white world despite the same economically neglected urban areas, the poverty stricken underfunded public schools, the high amount of Black inmates in the prison system, the high rates of Black unemployment, the stereotypical Hollywood blackballing, the racist reporting, journaling, and publishing of negative Black statistics, achievements, and underachievement.

Anytime there is a racial allegation brought to the forefront, if it gets any attention at all, there will be a token Negro there to refute it claiming racial harmony exist so there is no legitimate claim to racism, and the white public will accept the token's words as that of the Black community. From this point, any Black person who can see through the facade will be and can legitimately labeled a racist on a new standard because the tables of racism will be turned over to and toward Blacks and sadly, many Blacks will fall for the lie.

We are headed into dangerous territory and those who cannot see the truth now will be doubly deceived when the games begin. We must begin to prepare for the intense racial hatred of deception that will come forth if Obama becomes president. The best strategy in this next wave of battles is for Blacks to know beyond a doubt the truth, do not second guess your instincts, and know that that which is done in the dark will definitely come to the light. Do not be deceived, white America is about to stoop to their lowest level ever. But the end is not yet.

Natural Born Murderers

Who is Canada at war with? When was the last time Argentina attacked another country? Did anyone see Australia attack Japan, China drop a bomb on Cuba, or Sweden hit the beaches of the Philippines on CNN? If either of these scenarios have escaped your memory, that is because they never happened and probably never will. However, for the past 100 years, the United States has been profiled in all of the above. That is because America is the most war faring country in the world.

Anyone can safely assume that without a gun in their hands or mad scientist to develop life destroying bombs, the world may be as peaceful and serene as ever. Even when there is strife among countries somewhere in the world, the US has an interest involved, why is that? Why is it that the US cannot, NOT be at war? It is because the people who rule the US are blood thirsty, greedy imperialist pigs who possess the brain of the Machiavellian mouse in Pinky and the Brain who pushes intently to rule the world.

It is because they believe that their system of a Capitalist Democracy is fail proof and should be shared and practiced by every other country in the world. They believe - despite the recent failure of its own system - that free market and controlled world trade is the best policy for everyone in the world. And their method of convincing the rest of the world of this theory is to stick a freaking gun to their head.

Manipulation, intimidation, and instigation are how America became the richest and most militarily powerful country on earth. War, killing and maiming people of other countries, torture, population obliteration, indigenous genocide; all in the proclaimed fight for freedom. But let us weigh those freedoms against other parts of the world. Of course we are taught that we are the envy of the world and every other country lives in backwards, poverty stricken societies but at what cost are we any better?

The price of freedom actually breaks down to a lifestyle of endless work weeks, massive debt, and a constant barrage of immoral choices of lifestyle. We have the freedom to vote for crooks, consume the latest technology and foreign-made goods, abort our children, marry the same sex, live where we are designated, attend the greatest and most expensive colleges in the world, co-own a home with failing banks, and agree with Unconstitutional laws set forth by immoral politicians who are so far out of touch with the average family it has become a shame.

We are told the founding fathers and "our boys" have fought for these rights and freedoms with no emphases on the fact that millions of other people, families, mothers, fathers and children have died as collateral damage for us to become spoiled, rotten, selfish, arrogant, and world-hated people who are overworked, in debt, harassed and threatened constantly and taxed to death by our local police force, state troopers, judicial system and government leaders.

World War I, II, Vietnam, Korea, Serbia, Iraq, Iran, Russia, and who knows how many other countries litter our history books as if war is natural, practical, and necessary. We are told constantly that our military strength is the greatest in the world and made to believe that that is a good thing. Has anyone ever stopped to think that with such an image, America may be considered the greatest natural born murderers the world has ever seen?

We have been in a War on Aids, a War on Drugs, a War on Terror, a War on the Middle Class, a War on Immigration, a War on Poverty, and of course a War on every other social disease that has not only become a hazard to our lifestyles, but pushed into society by law by the very same leaders who announce these wars. In the past 400 years, the United States has even been at war with itself a few times including the internal wars with the British, the French, and the infamous Civil War. Not to mention the slaughter of the Indians and the Africans.

Suggestion, remove the gun from America's hand and let nature take its course and we will see what other countries actual pose a threat to humanity other than the United States. If what our leaders tell us is true, the world will self-implode in a matter of days because we are not there to keep it under control. But as we introduced in the beginning of this message, it does not look as if Canada, Chile, Denmark, South Africa, or Mexico has any plans to invade any other country. In fact, the only countries that are a true threat to society have close ties with the United States. Can you name them?

Forgive Us Our Debt

Greed has toppled America and arrogance will solidify its defeat. The unwillingness of American political leaders and gatekeepers to admit to the greed that hundreds of years of capitalism has brought forth, and the unwillingness to address the issue from the side of the people will ultimately bring the United States to its knees. Restructuring the financial system is obviously needed but the rampant greed of America's rich and wealthy will never concede to such a restructuring.

Professing to follow the lead of Jewish law based on Christian values, America will defend Israel to the death but will not adhered to the concepts of its biblical laws, such as the ancient law of Jubile written in the book of Leviticus chapter 25. It talks about how after fifty years, all debts and oppression and servitude must cease for the nation to stabilize its financial and moral base: a shadow and type of restructuring.

The credit crises of America have placed everyone in debt beyond their ability to repay, from individuals to large corporations to the government itself. False and fake money have spoiled us to overpriced consumer goods and expensive homes worth little and cars of gas-guzzling capacity. Now the bills have come due and no one can pay. Wipe the slate clean and start over.

Start again with cash and bartering and give money a real value backed by gold and never again allow the beast of credit take control of our lives. However, because people have become so greedy, selfish, and apathetic, they are not willing to forgive anyone of their debts except for the corporations that have brought people and the country to the curse they are in now. The ignorance and hypocrisy of this country is now feeding on its own filth.

Reaping the Sowings of the Prosperity Gospel

Many thousands of church-goers are awaking to a reality their pastors neglected to teach during the prosperity gospel sermons; that laying up treasures on earth but not with God is detrimental in the growth of the believer. As the economy drops to record levels not since the Great Depression, the words of Jesus comes in loud and clear, "...for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (St. Matthew 5:45).

In a sanctimonious twist of fate, hundreds of thousands of church-goers are losing their man-made promises of riches and wealth to banks, unemployment lines, and debt collectors. As a result of congregations not able to meet their basic financial needs, more churches than ever are in foreclosure.

"Pastors around the nation are doubling as financial shepherds for their mortgage-distressed flocks."

In another twist of deceptive fate, sermons have changed from the once "tithing will bring you a blessing from God" to a quieter, "We can refer you to government programs that will help with debt relief."

"Bishop T.D. Jakes, one of the most renowned preachers of the prosperity gospel, has not tailored his messages to address the changes in the economy or how people should manage their money. But his Dallas-based church, the Potter's House, offers a program that provides tips on financial literacy, budgeting and credit restoration.

Spokesman Curtis Coats said about 250 people are enrolled, with 108 more on a waiting list. Over the past year, 1,000 people have finished the course."

Greeting hurricane victims with President Bush

Not only did predatory lenders lurk in the darkness pouncing on anxious church-goers as home buyers, but preachers also hid in inconspicuous places and pounced on church members encouraging them to "buy that house or that car or pray for that promotion." However, when the bills came due and the economy hit bottom, the church itself or the pastor do little to offer relief.

They pressured members to pay tithes beyond what they could actually afford, stressing their finances and promised that God would make a way. Not that all church members are facing hard times, but those who were caught in the trap of get-blessed-quick schemes, not truly understanding the ways of God, are the ones who are now suffering.

Those who were under God's protection did not get that house they so earnestly prayed for as a blessing, and though they were disappointed at the time, they now realize the blessing was not getting the house. But those who grabbed at the house despite God's warning, now suffer the pains of foreclosure.

Church pastors never took the time to explain that with prosperity comes suffering, they instead suggested to members that they do not have to suffer to prosper, and to get all they can get now instead of waiting for the season of harvest.

Many people took the messages the wrong way and tithed, purchased prosperity gospel CDs and DVDs and are now faced with losing their homes, jobs, and large amounts of debt. However, the pastors who teach such things are quit well-off from the profits of their CD and DVD sales, thus leaving the flock to the buzzards of the air and government programs.

"At Ebenezer Christian Church, Pastor Victor Jarvis said, church members approach him and whisper, 'I'm losing my house. Please pray for me so I'm able to sell it.' Ordinarily Jenkins's sermons are about spiritual freedom and ridding one's self of sin. But his message has taken a different turn lately -- one that preaches the dangers of overspending and debt."

Of course, many pastors will not publicly or on national television admit that many of their members are suffering like everyone else in this bad economy and they will never take responsibility for leading the flock down the roads of hard times and suffering, they will continue to claim prosperity and victory, but the truth will prevail to the most stubborn pastors and the years of deception in the dark will soon come to the light before it is all over.

Mega-church pastors who took advantage of the faith-based initiatives and were able to grow their churches and their community programs, have found out the hard way that if they are not using the money to honestly help the community and are not sincerely teaching people the ways of God, the faith-based programs were all in vain.

According to witnesses, "The close relationship between people and their churches has prompted state officials to work with the faith-based community to identify homeowners facing foreclosure and warn people of the dangers of mortgage rescue scams. In turn, area churches are directing struggling members to state programs.

The Rev. Grainger Browning Jr., pastor of Ebenezer AME Church in Fort Washington, said his church acts as a liaison for the government because houses of worship are limited in how they can help people.

He said some churches set aside money to help its members in financial distress, but the amount is restricted and almost always less than the need."

Excuse me, but the church should not depend on the government but depend on God. But here reveals the broken connection between the mega-church theory of prosperity and God's prosperity. The leaders will now be held accountable for the losses of the people; however, the time has not yet come to its fullest. From the very book of Malachi by which the prosperity preachers increased their riches by threatening people to pay tithes and not rob God comes the proclamation against those church leaders:

"And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you. If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart" (Malachi 2:1,2).

As church foreclosures rise and more church families lose their homes and jobs, pastors will have to answer for their flock's condition but many have already started twisting the words of the Bible to fit their messages of face-saving deception. These pastors must take the spiritual road to recovery instead of the worldly road. If they stay on the worldly road by pushing people in need toward the government, they will surely suffer loss. But if they repent and teach the truth about God and money, that prosperity is not a means to an end with God, they can escape financial ruin.

Riches can make themselves wings and fly away and many mega-church pastors that have lived deliciously on the fruit of the flock's earnings can surely lose what they have claimed God has given them. Change has come to America and that change has come through the judgments of God. He is bringing down the rich and raising up the poor and oppressed and it is only a matter of time until he reaches the pulpits of America's most deceptive pastors.

The Statistics are in on American Racism

For years Black America has had to endure the whine of bootlicking Uncle Toms such as Larry Elder, Juan Williams, Bill Cosby, and others who would appear on national television and publicly humiliate and diminish the voices of the masses of Black America where it pertains to racism in America. Well, with assistance from God himself and a twist of fate, the statistics have revealed what we already knew.

Lack of verifiable proof as in facts and statistics restrained the masses from proving that racism was in fact very alive and well and has a lot to do with the deterrent of Black advancement. It is virtually impossible to measure the hearts of people as to what they are thinking and feeling. But now we have proof. Hard data via polls, statistics, opinions, and from their own mouths, a large portion of white America have admitted they are racist.

Logic and common sense in addition to these stats can safely crunch the numbers and conclude that at or around 55% of, or close to three-fourth of white America has negative feelings toward Blacks, subtly or outward. Not only can we conclude their feelings, but we can attached those feelings to direct action toward Blacks, including youth, women, Black men, and children and Black America collectively. In areas of economics, politics, health, education, judicially, and socially, we now know that there are biases toward Blacks based on false assumption, stereotypes, and media misinformation.

We can safely gather these conclusions because this is how the news media, low-income and many other white Americans have based their perceptions of Barack Obama. They believe what they want to believe and what the news media has fed them, such false information, misguided, twisted, and erroneous information contrived by lying, supremacist producers, media personnel and political pundits from the angry white-male crowd.

Irony at its most revealing and powerful has the elite white crowd in a flux. During the primaries, in there desperation to destroy Obama and to secure a place for Hillary, they were anxious to show that lower-working class white America are not in support of Obama during the primary season, yet in doing so, they exposed the racist areas of the country as well as the statistical number of racists there are in the country. Idiots! In essence, they are exposing themselves as liars after years of claiming "racism does not exist in America." What they are doing is almost comical.

While Clinton and the white media proclaimed that working class whites support her over Obama and those same working class whites profess to not voting for Obama because he is Black, what does this say? Numerically and statistically, it says the majority working class whites are racist. Reportedly, the whites who do support Obama are educated and have obviously moved beyond race as a factor, [supposedly], so logically, those without education are ignorant racist and are more easily to persuade.

The news media are in fact proving themselves racist because they seek to persuade negatively, and if their plans have an effect on the working class whites, then the media class whites are ignorant racist themselves. This is hilarious. In addition, right-wing radio talk shows and television news casters are taking responsibility for persuading the white vote against Obama, so again, logic says that they too - the whites working for major media networks - are racist and those who hire them are racist, which confirms that whites in power have influence over race relations and Black representation where it pertains to advancement.

If major news media could have convinced those watching that Obama believed what Rev. Wright believes or that he is an extremist Muslim tied to terrorism, or any other negative image, they can convince them that Blacks in general are questionable, which they have been doing for years. This in itself has an influence on how Blacks are treated in public by employers, doctors, judges, teachers, major institutions and in all other areas in American society.

How can anyone refute the facts? If crunched logically and when adjusted for error, whichever states voted overwhelmingly for Clinton after the Wright scandal based on media influence, no one knows how many of the states before the scandal broke would have still supported Obama. So concluding again, the power of media influence, 1/3 of those probably would not have voted for Obama which now pushes the racial hatred meter up to 65% of whites who are questionable racist.

Now we see the Uncle Toms of America who practice the statistical game they preach and see that the facts reveal that racism is a major factor in the progression of Black life in America. From this point, however, there is no refuting the facts; even though the raw data itself is no way accurate of the depths of racism when natural unction is applied.

What they - the Uncle Toms - refuse to see in the form of unction can be multiplied twice over when added to their statistics, which would finally push the racial hatred meter up to 75% of white America have serious problems with Blacks and will use their powers in all areas of social life to restrain Black growth. We rest our case; so hell yes, I Proudly Blame the White Man Because I Know it is Not Me with the Problem

Black America, Aids and the big white lie

They are lying! The Aids that is affecting Black America today is not the same Aids virus that surfaced during the infection of white homosexual males in the early eighties. This form of Aids is one scientifically concocted and specifically engineered for the genocide of Blacks in America and in Africa. No scientific proof is needed but mere common sense and a deep revelation from the Spirit of God.

A recent report by American tabloids about the current Aids rate in America stands by the continued lie that there is no conspiracy toward Blacks. The social pundits and so-called medical experts on television news are immovable in their claim of innocence of this travesty and mock anyone who thinks otherwise.

Jeremiah Wright, Louis Farrakhan, and many other notable Black thinkers who have their suspensions know and believe that something is extremely fishy about the way the Aids rates rose in Africans and now in the population of Black Americans, mainly our Black sisters. In fact, anyone within thinking range of logic and common sense and a spiritual connection to God can see that something evil is brewing.

However, in order to downplay the revelation, the public media has to discredit all Black thinkers and anyone who would bring light to this serious and deadly issue. This mad scientific experiment lead by crazed scientist of western culture have - in their minds - all but laid the origin of the Aids virus and the filthy lifestyle associated with it on the lifestyle of Black people.

As Aframerica wrote back in 2003, Suspected Genocide: AIDS and the Black World "Understanding the theories and formulas of nuclear fusion takes a mind continuously focused on and dedicated to developing scientific advancements into the technological realm of time and matter, but to notice the shift of the AIDS virus from the white homosexual male population to the larger portion of the Black-American community and the majority of African nations over a time period of 15 years takes nothing more than simple common [damn] sense."

In recent years, back in 2005 and 06, the CDC was reporting high rates of Chlamydia among Black women, "Surveillance data show higher rates of reported STDs among some minority racial or ethnic groups when compared with rates among whites.". They were doing this to soften the blow for what was to come, the unexpected high rates of Aids that would infect the Black community.

This disease was engineered specifically for Blacks and has the title of white power written all over it. They have convinced ignorant Black advocates of Aids to believe that we are somehow to blame for this epidemic. They are presenting the issue in a most negative light pointed directly at Black lifestyle and relationship habits, with the hidden agenda of reducing the Black birth and marriage rates. This is classic Hilter-style propaganda and attempted genocide.

Brothers and sisters, if you know someone with Aids, or if your young son or daughter suddenly contract this evil white-induced virus, please trace all doctor visits and hospital stays they may have recently frequented going back a ten year span: trace back diet, change in diet, places eaten, people socialized with, and such lifestyle choices that may uncover exposure to any suspicious white authorities.

If you find a pattern between and among three to 4 people who have come in contact with one another in close proximity to any related place, document and publish the results, then collaborate with others who have done the same across the country: take the matter to God in prayer and then the U.N. in protest. This has got to end somewhere and most likely it will end to their own disadvantage as usual.

In their twisted and diabolical minds combined with the hatred of Blacks for no reason other than barbarianism, white America will reap what they sow and suffer the consequences in the end and like always, another generation of Blacks will rise from the ashes untouched.

Do not believe the lies they are publishing throughout the world. In your defense, take care of yourself through safe sex and choice of partners, but do not allow this lie to permeate your minds to the point of not reproducing another beautiful Black child or reconsidering furthering your life by the grace of God's blessing of marriage. Stand strong and live in peace.

The Making and Use of the American Uncle Tom Negro

This has got to be a bad joke. If the American public, specifically Black America, is swallowing the poison of white America's old "credit to your race," token Negro usage strategy, Black America as we know it will collapse quicker than we realize. This pastime has become sickening and has to be stopped or else the consequences are going to be traumatic for this country. Uncle Tom Negroes has got to be exposed and brought down, now!

We will not even return to the cotton fields on this one, with a history lesson of house Negro, field Negro; we do not have to because this sick and twisted practice is happening right before our eyes today on national television, radio, and in many popular magazines. However, like the Negroes of the past, these Negroes today have no shame in their status as Uncle Toms, which is the main hindrance in the victory for Black dignity. Thus, destroying their pride of Uncle Tomism is the key.

What is very funny and blatantly obvious, is that white folks love this. It pacifies them like a hot tub and as long as their egos are pacified, they will continue this childish, adolescent game of human trafficking, humiliation, and public shame. They are in their prime where it pertains to ignorance, believing that people actually accept their ham-handed attempt to get their points across and to influence public thinking about Black folks based on one-sided opinions of Black people who they have paid to agree with them.

It is hilarious to watch these antics of Black and white hypocrite/kindergarten teachers of American society on public television. The intellectual level of this spectacle is amazing. With their proclaimed titles and degrees of education, their blue and black suits and made-up faces, they are exposing the most obvious form of racism to the world that ever was.

First, Jesse Lee Peterson sounds like a 10-year-old child. He should not even be allowed on public television with such views. But as stated earlier, whites will go to any extreme to feel good about themselves, even if it means displaying a complete idiot with no moral or logical point to make. Funny as hell! Next, there is the Larry Elder and Juan Williams who are paid to represent the conservative side of Uncle Tomism. They will say what whites will not say, which means, duh, it is obvious that the Black people are put there because whites are afraid to say what they really think, so we are supposed to believe that these men actually have legitimate opinions.

Whites will not say certain things so, of course, they get Blacks to say it. How clever of them. And we, high school educated Black folks and dumb back wood rednecks are supposed to accept this as legitimate news reporting? What in hell are these people being taught for $160 year tuition at these colleges? Whatever TF 101?

Now, moving on to the mainstream Uncle Toms, let us discuss pop culture in the Black community. Hollywood Blacks, athletes, singers and rappers, magazine publishers, television broadcasters and web publishers of Black America have been watered down so bad by mainstream Uncle Tomism that they cannot even speak their minds. They speak white folks mind. They write white folk words and ideals, copy white folk attitudes, beliefs, lifestyles and pass it on to Black America disguised as Black culture.

Black folks, who graduate from the public school system after studying the goodness of American history and culture, further their education in white colleges and learn the contemporary philosophy of thought designed by white scholars and writers, then apply this knowledge to life; to their marriages, their families and children, and to their work ethics and become just like elitist white folks: mentally confused, arrogant, unhealthy, in-debt, unhappy, and biased toward any other culture on the earth.

They then turn and look at other Blacks who still believe in dignity and integrity and that continues the fight for social justice, and degrade them as shameful. They have learned to continue the American tradition of racism and Uncle Tomism by proclaiming that Blacks are ignorant, self-destructive, self-hating, prone to crime, irresponsible, and furthermore unworthy, and that whites are right, good, God-fearing people that cannot and have not done any wrong.

Forget the past, slavery and Jim Crow, and live for today. Even though the majority of white America is living off the interest of slavery and Jim Crow. It has become a social disgrace to "blame the white man." He has done nothing to you; he can do no wrong, Black folks problems are because of Black folks, not white privilege, wealth, or power, but because of Black negligence.

Our people have become so brainwashed in white manipulation that we have not minds of our own, but our minds are owned by white people and we cannot see this. We think we have to work twice as hard and long for us to meet the minimum standards of life and equal white folk, but this should not be the case. The truth is, we do not meet the minimum standards because of white privilege, wealth and power. But as long as there are Black people to tell us and the world that we are the problem and not them, we will always have a problem. The strategy is genius and working well and they know it.

Solution. Post to your blog, your website and to your email list any and all such incidences of Uncle Tomism so we and the world can know to pay no attention to their words. For they are the words of the divider.

Radio One Unite with Yankelovich to Divide Black America

Talk about self-hatred. In an unprecedented strategy of house negroism, the Radio One American mainstream media-made elitist team of Negroes has come into cahoots with a socialist team of market researchers to develop a way to segment Black America into branches in a greedy capitalist attempt to put us up for sale in the global market.

Shamelessly, stipulated segments of Black America were given labels such as the "Black is Better" crowd, the "Family Struggles" crowd, and the "Sick and Stressed" crowd, among other stereotypical labels (shown below). They are doing it all via surveys and polls.

The two organizations, in a claimed attempt to represent and give voice to Black America, have designed a strategy to capitalize on the stigmas of Black America but have started out on the wrong foot already.

As quoted from the website Blackamericastudy.com, "Radio One, is the leading media company focused on understanding African Americans. It is committed to demonstrating the power of the Black community - as thinkers, activists, consumers and citizens - and to reflecting the texture and diversity of our community, which often gets lost in mainstream portrayals of Black Americans. Because of its commitment to Black America, Radio One engaged Yankelovich, a nationally respected research firm, to conduct the largest segmentation study ever done of African Americans, a study that highlights what holds Black America together and what makes it diverse."

The problem, however, is Black America is not as diverse as they claim, not in eleven different segments. The most interesting statement by Radio one says, "This richer view is particularly important because it clearly shows how Blacks and African-Americans are not all the same." WTF? What the hell does that mean and since when did Black America become two entities? This statement calls for serious evaluation.

First, how in hell did they drum up 11 other sub-segments of the Black population without imputing complete personal speculation of some corporate elitist Black and how they see the world through House Negro eyes? The fact is, what they are trying to do - and when we say they we mean the elitist Blacks of America - is attempt to separate themselves from the underclass of Black America for the benefit of white corporate America and for the sake of class and political differentiation.

Below are the degrees of separation in this new Black American landscape:

Connected Black Teens

They are tech savvy, highly social, brand driven and fans of Black music (Hip Hop and R&B). They have a plan for their future, they want to preserve Black cultural traditions and believe that too much focus is put on the oppression of Blacks.

Digital Networkers

Over half of this web savvy, high tech, mobile segment are college or high school students who 'network' heavily using Facebook, MySpace, instant messaging and their cell phones. They are saving money - to buy a home or for retirement.

Black Onliners

Heavy web users, this mostly male segment is stressed by their work/life balance and the need to straddle Black and White worlds; they are focused on money as the most meaningful measure of success and are the most stressed of any segment about 'having to fit in'. They are the most frequent users of Black websites and the most frequent online shoppers.

Stretched Black Straddlers

Mostly 18-34, this online, cell phone toting segment is the most stressed by 'straddling' the needs of family and work. Stressed about money and a lack of time, they are heavy users of Black TV and websites and the most likely to say they have been racially discriminated against in the past three months.

New Middle Class

The best educated, most employed and wealthiest segment is mostly between the ages of 25 and 44 and is the most technologically forward segment. They are the most likely to describe themselves as Black rather than African-American and to believe that problems in the Black community can best be solved by Blacks. They are positive about the future and forward looking.

Family Struggles

Mostly female and heavy TV watchers, this segment is struggling economically and is stressed trying to raise their children on a tight budget. They are the most likely of any segment to relate to the ways Blacks are portrayed on Black TV. Most of their friends and co-workers are Black.

Black is Better

This confident, optimistic, fun-loving segment is very focused on family and their job.

They are the most responsive to Black media and most likely to 'buy Black', consistent with their very strong focus on Black culture, history and solidarity.

Sick and Stressed

Mostly over the age of 35, this struggling segment is stressed about money and health, pessimistic about their personal future, and least likely to say things are getting better for them. They are the least likely to have a healthy lifestyle, to play sports or work out or have health insurance.

Faith Fulfills

This highly religious segment, who spend more time than average volunteering for religious or non-profit organizations, is most likely to trust God to take care of things. With an average age of 48, they experience low levels of stress and are the least likely to have been raised by a single parent or to worry about money a lot.

Broadcast Blacks

Highly confident, independent and positive in their attitudes, this female-skewed, older segment is the most likely to say things are getting better for them. They are heavy users of TV and radio (especially Gospel radio) and have the lowest Internet usage. They place high importance on 'buying Black'.

Boomer Blacks

This 'oldest' segment (average 52) is tech savvy with high ownership of computers, DVRs, home theater systems and wireless internet access - 90% are online. They are the most likely to believe that Black children should have Black role models and that it's important to take advantage of the opportunities won by previous generations.

So who are the Blacks and who are the African Americans? They have not only separated themselves on an income bases, but now they have gone as far as social, religious, and cultural separation. Albeit the study reflects cultural habits of Blacks in America, however, the determination of the elite to separate themselves is disheartening. The list can in many ways overlap, from the religious successful to the online struggler. The presumptions are simply immeasurable.

Catherine Hughes, Founder and Chairperson of the Board, said. "While people are less inclined these days to think that all Blacks are the same, they really do not understand the diversity within the African American community...Blacks share many commonalities regardless of age, income and geography, but there are also differences -- that suggest a new understanding of the past and a more optimistic sense of the future."

There are commonalities between and among all races and cultures of people, not just Blacks. This suspicion of desired separation of lower and upper income Blacks arise from the historical separation of the Civil Rights and Black Nationalist crowd and reignited by the most recent political fallout of Barack Obama and his pastor Jeremiah Wright, who claims Black Liberation Theology as a belief system of Black America.

And while many Blacks were in agreement of Wright's theories, many, mainly the elite Blacks, want badly to distance themselves from the theory, and hurried to create this new and in-depth divisive study of Black life in America led by one of the most elitist cultural gatekeepers of Black lifestyle, the Media One Corporation.

There are not two Black Americas, only one. The problem is there is a sector of Black America (the African Americans) that does not want to associate or be affiliated with other Blacks (the Blacks). This has always been the problem and will remain the problem continually giving legitimacy to the myth of Willie Lynch. The only thing Black America needs to know and do to stay strong among itself is to Stay Black and Die

Zero Tolerance for Hostile Cops

How long does the public have to bury our heads under police brutality before one of our so-called community or political leaders put a stop to the abuse? When will judges find the balls to punish police who blatantly and violently abuse children, elderly people, and innocent victims? If authority can have a zero tolerance for criminals and school children, why not the offenders of those sworn to uphold the law?

At some point incidences of police brutality must be taken at face value, which is simply unnecessary force, abuse, and plain brutality. It does not take a day in court to judge some of the vile acts of some gung-ho cops out there, hyped on power because they have a badge and a gun. Somebody got to have some common sense.

Instead, cops are placed on administrative, paid leave, and some return with their jobs and no criminal investigation, trials or civil consequences. Many are not held accountable for their actions and many get away with murder, abuse and assault without taking responsibility for their actions. And the courts and our political leaders allow this while citizens suffer for their actions whether right or wrong.

These men should be fired, immediately for any act of brutality, assault and especially murder, whether voluntary or not and should not be allowed back on the force. They should find more passive careers where they have no access to weapons of any kind. It is one thing to hurt someone for good reason (and many are justified in self defense) but when the situation is in any way questionable, serious consideration should be taken as to whether the officer is and ever will be, in his or her right mind again.

Anger and fear are very different motives when someone is hurt by the aggressor and police officers should not be given the benefit of the doubt in all situations like they are now, but psychologically evaluated to the fullest degree. People's lives are not play things where the state is assumed innocent when one is taken, but people have families, children and parents who have lost someone.

Of course officers who are killed in the line of duty by an assailant are exceptions, but if police are given a free pass and an excuse every time one has to pull his gun, nightstick or taser on a civilian and use it, we should ask hard questions and see the reality for what it really is and not assume the victim had it coming. That is ludicrous and sloppy policy on the part of any police force.

On the other hand, when will the people rise up against such brutality and arm themselves against an apparently out of control system of this new government police state. Too many times, these men and women are being justified as doing their job even to the point that many of them go free after killing, abusing, or hurting people who did not have it coming or who were victims of some cop having a bad day.

Mainstream opinion has become blurred and people are assuming that anyone who is beaten or shot by a police officer somehow had it coming. This mentality gives rise to an abusive system where one day the police will have the right to shoot and kill anyone at any freaking' time they want. And if someone stands up to speak out, they too, can be shot and killed simply for speaking out. This is getting insane.

The cowards in office and those sitting on the judicial benches are accessories to some of the most heinous crimes committed against the people this country has ever seen. They are paid to look the other way, withhold crucial evidence that would otherwise clear the victim, and have the power of cover-up, favoritism, and all other judicial scandal.

This society is truly asking for a rebellion. Maybe not this year or even the next, but soon, when it touches home and one of their own, they will finally stand up and fight the forces they have created. When that day comes, as usual, they will look themselves in the faces and ask that famous American question when all control is lost and when tragedy strikes, "where did we go wrong?"
